Young Kelvin was quite complacent about it. "They are doing me a service," said he. "The margins I have put up on the stocks previously bought are ample. They are not going to force prices far enough to make you call for more margin, but if they do the margin will be forthcoming. In the meantime, however, they are enabling me to seil at a much higher-price. They are playing my own gaine

"I am a better financial weather prophet for this one time than the Wall Street Journal," declared Phillip confidently. "In a very few days I will show you a cloud that will cover this entire district like a blanket of midnight. I know something, I tell you."

This was the fourth or fifth time since he had first come into the office that young Kelvin had ventured such dire predictions, and in spite of the fact that, except for the growing scarcity of actual currency, there was no hint or trace of trouble to come. Henry Galleon began to be a trifle impressed by them, so much so that he | ceipts from these sales were not to be began speaking of the matter to oth- deposited in banks, but were to be ers of his kind. Was there an impending break? No one could

In the meantime Kelvin steadily sold his twenty stocks in 1,000 share lots. He became known as the "cash bear," and there were a dozen conflicting stories as to how he had got his money.

Young Eldridge took a great fancy to him and before he had been on the market a week had him in at Kerry's for dinner with a lot of the big guns of the market. It was discovered that Kelvin distinctly knew how to comport himself in any company. The only thing of note he said during that dinner was that he confidently looked very shortly for the biggest crash in the history of the street. They heard this remark in amused silence, but in the main they liked bim. Rollins, one of the conservatives of the railroad group and of vast experience, was the only one who studied Kelvin se-

"I know why," put in Peliman, one of the more reckless operators of the railroad group. "It's because our young friend is on the short side of the market for all the real cash in the country. There must come a panic."

They were quite content to laugh at Kelvin. He was necessarily "green," being young and new to the street. Rollins got Phillip to one side after

The per capita circulation of money in this country is estimated at $35. In reality, allowing for these reserves, the actual amount is probably but a little over $15 per capita of actual circulating hand to hand cash. Of this over $10 per capita is now in the possession of Henry Breed, and this money has seeped away so in-sidiously that not one of you shrewd financiers, who make a knowledge of the ebb and flow of money your busi-ness, has been aware of it. Gentle-men, it is nearly all gone now, and soon there will be no money whatever in the United States!"

The Road Towards Happiness

By MAURICE MAETERLINCK.

Today misery is the disease of mankind, as disease is the misery of man. And even as there are physicians for disease, so there should be physicians for human misery. But can the fact that disease is, unhappily, only too prevalent, reader it wrong for usever to speak of health which were indeed as though, in anatomy—the physical science that has most in common with morals—the teacher confined himself exclusively to the study of deformities. We have surely the right to demand that his theories be based on the healthy and vigorous body; as we have also the right to demand that his theories be tased on the present hour, should take as his standard the soul that is happy, or that at least possesses every element of happiness, save only the necessary consciousness.

We live in the bosom of great injustice; but there can be, I imagine, neither cruelty nor callousness in our speaking at times, as though this injustice had ended, else should we never emerge from our circle.

It is imperative that there should be some who dare speak, and think, and act as though all men are happy; for otherwise, when the day comes for destiny to throw open to all the people's garden of the pramised land, what happiness shall the others find there, what justice, what beauty or love?

Most Pressing Needs.

It may be urged, it is true, that it were best, first of all, to consider the most pressing needs, yet is this not always wisest; it is often of better avail from the start to seek that which is highest. When the waters beleaguer the home of the peasant in Hölland, the sea or the neighboring river having swept down the dryke that protected the country, most pressing it is then for the peasant to safeguard his cattle, his grain, his effects; but wisest to fly to the top of the dyke, summoning those who live with him, and from thence meet the flood, and do battle.

Humanity, up to this day, has been like an invalid tossing and turning on his sick couch in search of repose, but, none the less, have words of true consolation come only from those who live with him, and from thence meet the flood, and do battle.

"I began to have an itching over my whole body about seven years ago and this settled in my limb, from the knee to the toes. I went to see a great many physicians, a matter which cost me a fortune, and after I noticed that I did not get any relief that way, I went for three years to the hospital. But they were unable to help me there. I used all the medicines that I could see but became worse and worse. I had an inflammation which made me almost crazy with pain. When I showed my toot to my friends they would get really frightened. I did not know what to do. I was so sick and had become so nervous that I positively lost all hope.
